

CHESHIRE

Alsager	The Mere, always a pretty feature of the place, must have been charming then, surrounded as it was with trees and fields, and clothed to the water's edge with fern and bracken. A fine old yew tree in The Avenue marks the spot where a little black and white cottage stood with garden sloping to the Mere. Older than any of these houses were a few farm homesteads, still left us. http://www.alsager.com/tour/history/mcewen.htm
Arley Hall	1938 description: "In the gardens are splendid yew hedges massively buttressed as high as the castle walls."
Guilden Sutton	Be aware that there are two churches in this village A storm destroyed St John's church in 1802, but it was rebuilt on the same spot An ancient yew has been described as "flourishing nearby," thought to be on the south side of the church.
Mobberley	A yew hedge around an ancient moat in the grounds of Mobberley Old Hall, near Knutsford.
Over	A yew, when recorded in 1897 was said to have survived the 1662 storm. No information as to whether this is a churchyard reference.
Shotwick	St Michael. 1946 "Two fine old Yews connected with the graves of two well-known families."
Thurtaston	"Old Yews" in St Bartholomew's churchyard 1946
West Kirby	St Bridget's churchyard 1946 "Old yew trees, one by the lych gate."
Willaston	Christ Church 1946 "Old Yews"
Woodchurch	Holy Cross churchyard. 'Yews' recorded in 1940
