

NOTTINGHAMSHIRE

Annesley Park	In an 1867 account of deer parks is the following: "A wood with ridings had previously existed here, of which a plan may be seen in Thornton's 'Nottinghamshire.' In the common centre of the various ridings was one of the stands for commanding the game common at that period. Two of them still retain their names; 'The Yew Tree Stand,' now a row of six very large old yew trees on the brow of the hill inside the park, and 'The Buck's Head Stand,' the name of the wood adjoining.
Clarborough	St John the Baptist: In the churchyard is a yew tree believed to be older than the church. (1242)
Colston Bassett	Manor House – 600 year old yew avenue.
Kingswell Hill	There is a Kingswell School knocked down in 2004. The small ancient church which may or may not still exist was once "guarded by enormous yew trees."
Wilford	A record of 1780 notes an "old yew" – probably in the churchyard.
