

No historical record of this yew has been found. I learned of it from Percy Morgan, who in 1993 recorded 'a split trunk into 3 parts, 31' at 5' and 28' in the base'.

In 2002 I recorded the male yew growing SW of the church. It has become 3 fragment trees, with a few inches of stump showing where there was once a fourth, though this will disappear in time. The tree was inundated with ivy.

Girth around the base of the 3 living fragments was 27' 5"; by including the inch or so stump of the 4th it reached 30' 3".

© Tim Hills 2014

