

SURREY
Bisley	History of the County of Surrey 1911. Churchyard yew: "Near the porch is a yew tree."
Bramley	History of the County of Surrey 1911. Holy Trinity church with a "fine old yew on the north side."
Eggars Hill	St Michael's church. Legend that a yew was planted here in 1678 to mark the grave of Nell Gwynne's still born child.
Esher	Christchurch: "Several old yews" were recorded in 1946
Ewhurst	A Topographical Dictionary of England 1848. "On the summit of a hill in the parish, from which an extensive view of the adjoining counties may be obtained, are some tumuli, and also yew-trees of great antiquity".
Great Bookham	History of the County of Surrey 1911. On the S side of the churchyard is a yew with a known planting date of 1733/4.
Hammonds Copse	4 miles SW of Reigate. An earthbank, old hornbeams and yew trees, a substantial bank and ditch. Marked on explorer maps and Victorian maps.
Hydon Hill	In an 1832 poem by William Hone called Hydon Hill – "Now the restless eye may rove/From mead to mead, from grove to grove;/Now the village church it views/Nestled in its ancient yews;....."
Long Ditton	History of the County of Surrey 1911. The rectory is 'probably' a 16 th century house and on the south side stands "an ancient yew tree probably as old as the house."
Milford	History of the County of Surrey 1911. "In and around the hamlet of Milford are a number of old houses and cottages. One, a farm-house, with a fine old yew tree in front, has a large roof of steep pitch over the centre, which covered the hall, and a gabled wing of slight projection at either end, in which both the upper story and the gable-end over- hung. Its timber-framed construction is now hidden by plaster, and the barge boards of the gables are plain. The arms of Paine quartered with an unknown coat are in a window. The window-frames appear to be 17 th -century insertions in some cases, but one at least of the chimneys is original. The general date of this house may be about 1500."
Mitchley Wood, Sanderstead	In Mitchley Wood, off Mitchley Hill, there are at least eight yew trees which appear to be of some age. They are situated either side of a pathway leading up through the wood which leads eventually to Riddlesdown School.
Ripley	"There is a tunnel made of yew that leads to the west door of the church."
Shalford	History of the County of Surrey 1911: "The church of the Holy Trinity, originally a chapel attached to Shalford, has been grievously injured by several restorations and enlargements. It stands towards the north of the village street, near the corner at the cross roads. The site is level, and the churchyard is prettily planted with trees and shrubs, there being a fine old yew on the north side." Also: "As a relic of the past, the stocks and whipping-post, shaded by the yew tree under the churchyard wall, are of interest."
Thames Ditton	St Nicholas: Several Yews were reported in 1946.
