

The origins of this church and site are not known.

In 2000 three yews were recorded, growing in a line south of the church. The female tree nearest the road (1) had a girth of approximately 17' at the ground. From its solid bole of about 6' are numerous branches. This was the least healthy looking of the three yews.

The middle tree (2) is a male with branches spreading in all directions, including over the adjacent field. Girth was 18' 7" at the ground.

The tree furthest from the road (3) is male, with several large upright branches emerging from a solid looking bole at 6'. Foliage was abundant, especially on more recent growth. Branches which would have arched over the nearby fenced in grave had been sawn off. Girth 16' 4" at the ground.
