

November 2016: A large female yew grows in the SE corner of the churchyard. It consists of 3 huge stems around a 3' high centre full of humus. A 4th stem has snapped off and been replaced by a younger stem growing from near its base. The most easterly stem is completely hollowed out. This all suggests that these are well developed fragments from an old tree. Girth was 21' 2" close to the ground to obtain the lowest possible measurement. It included some thin ivy.
