

The yew presents as two fragments, the smaller section (A) connected to the larger (B/C) with a metal rod that encircles and cuts into each part of the tree. The section of the larger fragment that is marked (B) is in a position that suggests it began its existence as an internal stem within the original tree, whose only remaining outer sections are A and C. Girth around all the pieces was 20' 4" at the ground and around B and C was 14' 11".

A fine yew avenue leads towards this old tree.
