

2000: This remarkable female yew grows NW of the church and is presumably within the churchyard boundary. Two internal stems can be seen within its open front. Just out of the picture the bole divides into two main branches that rise side by side. At the time of the visit there was much yellow foliage.

We recorded a girth of about 18' above the bulging roots and allowing for the lean. In The Churchyard Yews of Gwent J.Daryll Evans recorded a yew with a girth of 396 cm at 1m (13'). This must be one of the many younger yews within the churchyard, rather than this one on its boundary.
