A male yew grows ENE of the church by the entrance gate, its girth 16' 11" in 2003, measured at the top of the wall. Foliage at that time was sparse, but in 2012 when these photographs were taken, it was thick and healthy. Ivy was rampant and filling the tree with unnecessary extra weight. The yew is beginning to push the perimeter wall outwards.

A second yew, also male, grows on the southern perimeter. It is a particularly tall tree and was also filled with ivy. Girth in 2012 was 17' 11" at 1'. Since the tree is on sloping ground this was 4' up on the bole where the ground slopes away.

There are reported to be old yews on the track leading away from Munslow towards Wenlock Edge.
