

2011: The old yew grows SW of and only four metres from the church. Girth was 18' 2" close to the ground, though only a small portion still supports growth. Ivy has taken hold in the dead section of the tree, and was so out of control as to be a potential threat to it. The tree appears to have been cut back to a height of about 8' and many branches of similar size grow from this point on the living portion of the tree.

In 2016 Paul Wood also recorded 18' 2" (5.54m) at the tree's narrowest point 3" from the ground. He too considered the bole a little fragile in places.
