

TILMANSTONE

St Andrew

Diocese of Canterbury

TR3020051470

1853: The yew's position close to the church porch is seen in Saunders' sepia drawing.

1936: 'The great yew of Tilmanstone has seen ..... the Norman builders of the church fashion the doorway of the church and its three Norman windows. It has seen the children of Tilmanstone brought to this font for 700 years or more.....' Mee The King's England

1987: The tree was badly damaged in the hurricane.

1999: The large female yew grows SW of the church. Four main branches lean outwards and spread over a large area, with some smaller branches dipping onto nearby graves. Parts of the bole were covered in adventitious growth. High in the centre of this large yew are portions of the old trunk.

Girth: 28' between ground and 3": 28' 7" at 1' : 30' 11" at 3'.

Several younger female yews grow on an embankment south of the church.
