

2016: Here is a Georgian church, built in 1767 on the site of a Norman church. A noticeboard in the churchyard recognises the presence of an old yew. Such information boards should be standard practice yet are rarely found.

There are two old yews here. The larger (right) is a female growing north of the church close to the perimeter wall and a steep drop to the farmyard below.

It is twin-stemmed with parallel trunks each about 10'/11' in girth sitting on top of a bole I recorded close to the ground as 17' 9".

This smaller girthed and younger yew grows NE of the church at the edge of the churchyard, where it looks out onto open countryside. Like the first yew it has two distinct sides, though on this yew one is larger and more complex than the other.
