

2001: A male yew with numerous branches growing upwards from around the outside edge of its bole. A gap at eye level reveals many more upright branches growing in the centre of the tree. Many have been removed on the side facing the church, with new wood being laid down around the holes. Foliage was thick and plentiful.
Girth 19' 4" at 3'

© Tim Hills 2015