

In 1791 Collinson's History and Antiquities of the County of Somerset recorded a 'large yew tree'.

2002: This male yew with a girth of 15' 8" at 2' grows due south of the church.

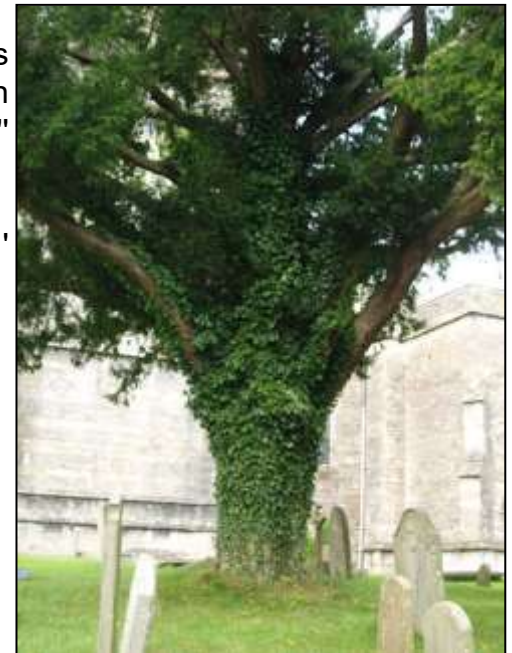

It is becoming a hollow shell, its centre a mix of decaying wood and a large elongated internal stem. The photos are from 2013 when the tree had become so full of ivy that it was not possible to remeasure.

In spite of ivy covering the trunk and filling the lower branches, the tree appeared in good health with thick foliage.

Also on the south side is this smaller girthed yew, recorded in 1991 by Percival Morgan as 9' 6" at both 3' and 4'.

In 2012 I recorded 10' 4" at both 1' and 3' over ivy.

This young commemorative yew grows at the west end of the churchyard. It is branchy from the base but well trimmed. It was planted on 18th January 1994, in Memory of Henry Charles Newton and Alice Dorothy Foyle Newton and family 1923-1977.
