

Of three yews that grow here, the most significant is close to the church on the west side. These fragments are all that remain today, with a combined girth of 12' 5" at 6".

The yew below left grows at the western perimeter, slightly north of the church. It is many branched from a low bole and had a girth of exactly 10' at its narrowest between the ground and 2'.

The yew growing close to the lych gate east of the church is twin stemmed from the ground and girthed 9' 9".
