

1938: A 'grand old yew' was noted in Mee's The King's England.

2003: Here is a male tree growing on sloping ground SW of the church, its thick buttress like features showing for 2' beneath an explosion of twiggy growth. Above this rise many upright young branches. Much good work clearing the ground around the yew had been done since a previous visit. One space on its SW face was hollowing and red heartwood was visible inside the decaying old stem. Girth is 15' 11" at 1'.
