

The 1970 Brecon Yew Survey recorded 4 in this churchyard, with girths of 26', 18', 13' and 10' 3".

2001: Only 2 remain, the 18' tree is lost along with one of the smaller yews.

The significant yew that still grows here is an ancient male, found on the south side of the church. Girth was 23' 1" at the ground. From its complex bole a main branch and 4 others develop, each with much dividing. Foliage in 2001 was thin, but Geoff Garlick's photos show that by 2006 it had revived.

Photos below showing the yew in 2015 were taken by Paul Wood.
