

There is thought to have been a church on this site since Saxon times.

2004: The yew at Amberley is one of only a handful of yews successfully moved as a mature tree. In the year 1724 it was taken from the vicarage garden to its new position south of the church and close to its porch.

The hollow female yew has a gash in one side which closes over at about 10' and becomes a fluted rising central branch.

Girth:

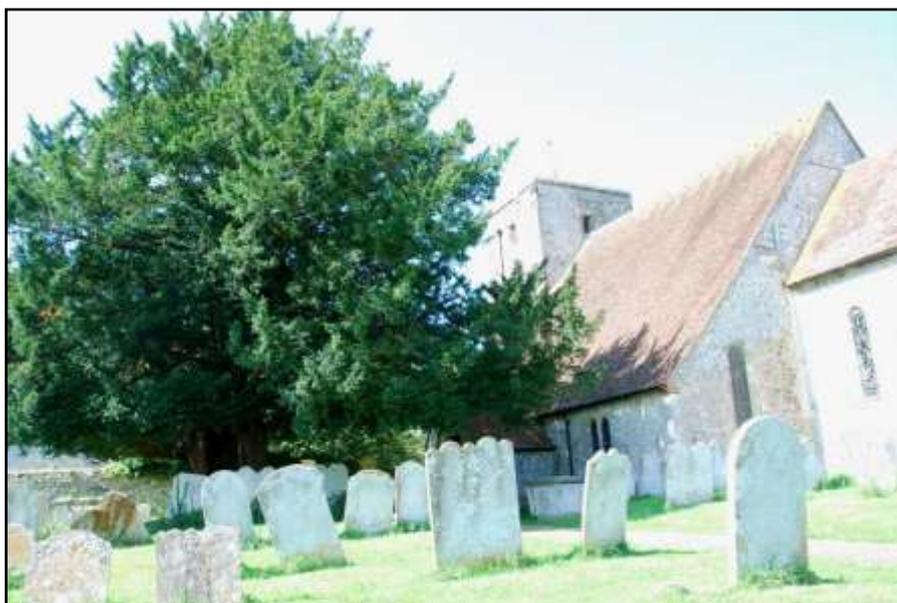

1997: 12m tall, with a diameter of 154 cm @ 0.4m - Owen Johnson The Sussex Tree Book

2004: 16' 3" at 1' as seen above - Tim Hills

2012: 16' 10" at 9" (taken from the west side of the tree where there is some natural thinning) - Peter Norton

Photos below - Peter Norton - 2012

© Tim Hills/Peter Norton - Ancient Yew Group - 2019