

2003: The female yew growing NW of the church is a hollow half shell of what would have once been a much larger tree. Girth of what remained was 14' 1" at 1' measured over the thick ivy that was still evident in these photos taken eleven years later in 2014. Also seen in the centre of the tree are scorch marks from fire damage. Behind the yew was an accumulation of churchyard waste that appeared to have built up over many years, though in 2014 this was at least contained behind wooden fencing. Many thick branches carrying abundant foliage rise from all parts of this 6' high shell.

© Tim Hills - Ancient Yew Group - 2019