BRIDGEND - churchyard sites with younger yews

BRIDGEND (Newcastle) St Illtyd SS9025880044 03/05/2024 Bob Burrows

The yew grows SE of the church.

The site is special for the 15th century wall paintings, older than its oldest yew. This grows west of the church at the top of a slope and close to the road. The mess of stones and soil beneath the tree as well as the elder surrounding its trunk made it impossible to measure. Its bole is elongated and was probably above 12/13ft.

A line of yews along the churchyard's west wall. Nothing about them suggested notable age. The largest girthed looked between 10' and 12' but is multi stemmed from low down. All trees are very upright in growth.

The yew grows at the east end of the church. Many discoloured leaves. Not especially healthy in appearance.
